

Aesop's Mad Libs #3

From "The Lion and the Mouse"

Once when a _____ was asleep, a _____ began _____ (noun) (adjective) (noun) (-ing verb) up and down upon him; this soon awakened the _____, who (noun)
placed his _____ upon the _____.
(adjective) (noun) (noun)

"Pardon, O King," cried the _____: "forgive me this (adjective) (noun)
time, I shall never _____ it: who knows but I may be able to (verb)
return the favor one of these days."

The _____ was so tickled at the idea of the _____ being able to (noun) (noun)
help him, that he _____ up his _____ and let him go. Some time (verb) (noun)
after the _____ was caught in a _____. Just then the _____ (noun) (noun) (adjective) (noun) happened to pass by, and _____ the _____ plight in which the (-ing verb) (adjective) _____ was, _____ up to him and soon _____ away the _____ (noun) (verb) (verb) (noun)
that bound the _____. "Was I not right?" said the _____.
(noun) (adjective) (noun)

Little friends may prove great friends.